Historian Forecasts Radical Changes In Jewish Life Over Next 40 Years Due To Past Trends

A noted historian told a meeting at Pittsburgh, Pa., of the Central Conference of American Rabbis that Jewish life in the United States will change radically over the next forty years as a result of strongly developing religious, educational, economic, cultural, and organizational trends that have emerged within the last decade. Dr. Jacob R. Marcus, a past president of the Central Conference, and Adolph S. Ochs, Professor of American Jewish History at the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio, accompanied his forecast with a warning. He urged members of the CCAR, the representative body of America's Reform rabbinate, "to learn to cope with these trends if American Jewry is not to emerge in the twenty-first century as a completely conformist, sterile, and stultified community."

Dr. Marcus, who is also president of the American Jewish Historical Society, spoke at the two-day conference and seminar for members in western Pennsylvania, northern Ohio, and Michigan. Rabbi Paul Gorin, of Temple Israel, Canton, Ohio, president of the Great Lakes-Western Pennsylvania Region, presided at sessions at Rodef Shalom Congregation, the Concordia Club, and Temple Sinai, in Pittsburgh.

Dr. Solomon B. Freehof, rabbi of Rodef Shalom Congregation and a CCAR past president who is also president of the World Union for Progressive Judaism, spoke on "Problems Of Law And Practice Among Liberal Synagogues Throughout The World." Dr. Freehof, who had just returned from a visit to South Africa, told the rabbis that "the Progressive congregations there are vital, strong, and flourishing."

Dr. Marcus, in his address, cited 10 recent trends which he said are beginning to alter American Jewish life. He listed these as follows:

With the decline of Orthodox and classical Reform Judaism, the Conservatives and Neo-Reformers will bring about a distinctive type of American Judaism. The American Judaism of the future will continue to have Conservative and Reform institutional bodies but will be marked by similar rituals, forms of worship, and religious customs.

The Jewish community is beginning to open its doors more widely than ever before to anyone who calls himself a Jew. This tolerance will increase rather than abate, especially in view of the rapid growth of inter-marriage.

The rapid rise of parochial and private schools in the future to cope with the decline of the public school system due to lack of public funds will give impetus to the rise of Jewish parochial schools. In the South, the sharp rise in parochial and private schools to escape desegregation will leave the Negroes not only with an impoverished public school system but virtually segregated in them. Jewish education in the future with its emphasis on instruction in Hebrew will improve markedly, influenced in part by the existence of the State of Israel.

The Jewish community now served by some 90 independent privately owned weekly newspapers will be served by newspapers owned and controlled by the community itself in the next forty years. These newspapers will have no editorial policy. There will be a truce on all ideological differences in the interest of maintaining communal peace, even if it has to come at this price.

Jews will be found largely in the suburbs. They will feel themselves far more secure than at any time in the past, either in Europe or America. As a result, today's Jewish defense agencies will turn to the work of strengthening the community from within, building its morale, rather than to meeting outside calumnies, threats, and discriminations.

The work now being done on a large scale by Jewish philanthropic and health agencies will pass to government with the widening of the social security system and the rise of socialized medicine. As this happens more and more, the Jewish community will emphasize counselling and psychiatric services to save the home and family. The basic problem to be faced by the Jewish community in the next generation will be gerontological, the problem of the aged. This was no problem in the past because of the general low expectancy of life.

The Jewish community will also develop vocational services on a broad community level to cope with the increasing automation of American economic life. The Jewish community, which today has twice as many college graduates proportionately as does the non-Jewish community, will seek to solve the problem of cybernation through better education and the development of needed skills.

There will take place over the next forty years the final emergence of the Jewish community Center and YMHA as the suburban club of the Jewish middle classes. Huge million-dollar buildings will rise incorporating health clubs, bowling alleys, and kosher-style snack bars. These will be a far cry from the slum settlement houses of the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

The numerous Jewish agencies that proliferate on the American scene as independent bodies will be subordinated in each community to an over-all Jewish Community Council that will coordinate the activities of those agencies deemed necessary, and will control their budgets. The Council will be concerned with the welfare of the community as a whole, raising funds centrally for local, national, and overseas causes. The Council will be representative of all elements in the community, and will move in the direction of representative democracy.

Dr. Marcus emphasized in his address that the synagogue will continue to occupy a primary place. He pointed out that the synagogue was central in Jewish communal life during the first days of Jewish settlement in America over 300 years ago, and has never lost its place in motivating Jewish life and in serving, if necessary, as a place of dissent. The noted historian and scholar serves also as the director of the American Jewish Archives, which is located on the Cincinnati campus of the Hebrew Union College. The Archives contains more than 2,000,000 documents going back to earliest colonial Jewish life.

The Central Conference of American Rabbis is the rabbinical body of the Reform branch of Judaism with a membership of over 800 religious leaders in the United States and Canada.

1956 Picture Of Soviet Rabbi, Since Jailed, Memento Of F.D. Roosevelt Grandchild, Says "Don't Forget Us"

A poignant postscript to the "treason" trial and conviction of Gedalia R. Pechersky, the former leader of Leningrad's Jewish community, has come to light with the discovery of a 1956 photograph of Mr. Pechersky with a granddaughter of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, taken in the Leningrad synagogue, says the New York Herald Tribune. On the back of the photograph, the man who was sent to jail last fall for twelve years on a charge of crimes against the state wrote to Miss Kate Roosevelt (who is now Mrs. William Haddad):

"I send you this photo that will remind you the days when you were in Leningrad and visited with your friends in the Central Synagogue. My best wishes and happiness to you, Miss Roosevelt, and to your great grandmother, Mrs. Eleonora Roosevelt! We are proud that we have such a beloved friend of the Jewish nation and especially of the Russian Jews.

"We are very thankful for the brave and noble deeds. Heaven and mankind will never forget it. And please don't forget us!"

A few months later, Mr. Pechersky was deposed as chairman of the Leningrad Jewish community on orders of state religious officials. Last June he was arrested and charged with treason. In October he was secretly tried, convicted, and jailed along with two other Jewish leaders in Leningrad.

The poignancy of the photograph, more than five years later, is simply this: That although the proceedings of the Pechersky trial in Leningrad have never been fully revealed, experts in Washington say that they have no doubt that the wholly coincidental, unplanned, and inconsequential encounter that Mr. Pechersky had with Miss Roosevelt, and scores perhaps hundreds of similar encounters with other foreigners, including Americans, may well have constituted a major part of the case against him.

Mrs. Haddad, who is the daughter of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, and Congressman James Roosevelt, of California, recalling her chance meeting with Mr. Pechersky, said, according to the New York Herald Tribune, that she was on a routine vacation tour of the Soviet Union in 1956 with friends. On the spur of the moment, they decided to go to Leningrad from Moscow.

When they got to Leningrad, one of the things they had on their list of things to see was the synagogue. When they arrived a special service was in progress. When it ended, they were surrounded by the congregation (as Americans are in almost any church in Russia). Mr. Pechersky introduced himself and took them to an anteroom for a few minutes of conversation. That is all there was to it.

While they were in the anteroom, they posed for the picture. Mrs. Haddad recalls no details. It was one of many ordinary incidents in the life of a tourist. In the fall of 1956, a couple of months after she returned to New York, the photograph arrived. She put it away and forgot about it — until, five years later, the publicity about the action against Mr. Pechersky stirred her memory.

Welfare Board Asks U. S. Aid To Help Train Social Workers

The National Jewish Welfare Board called for Federal aid to help train social workers, and also appealed for Government support in the "conduct of in-service training programs to increase the knowledge and skill of workers rendering public social welfare services."

The request was made at the five-day, biennial conference of the National Jewish Welfare Board at the Deauville Hotel, at Miami Beach. The board is the Government-authorized agency for serving the religious and welfare needs of Jewish personnel in the armed forces, says the New York Times. It is also the national association of Jewish community centers and Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Associations.

Social service experts at the meeting emphasized that public and private social agencies were hindered in trying to provide services needed because of "an exploding population, and stresses and strains on family life due to economic dislocations."

They pointed out that, of the 110,000 persons in social work, only about 26 per cent were professionally trained. There are fifty-seven accredited graduate schools of social work in the U.S., they said, which "are 90 per cent full." These schools, the experts said, must be expanded so that "10,000 social workers can be graduated annually."

The National Jewish Welfare Board and its affiliated agencies now provide $200,000 annually in scholarships for social work students.

The delegates also called for increased Federal grants and loans to institutions of higher learning "for enlarged facilities, improved compensation to faculty members, expanded physical facilities, and suitable equipment."

While voicing opposition to Federal aid to religious schools, the conference asked for the "expansion of Federal scholarships for undergraduate education to enable students of outstanding ability and with financial need to secure higher education."

The delegates also adopted a series of recommendations to reorganize the National Jewish Welfare Board's services and structure "in order to catch up with the consequences for American Jewish life of sweeping sociological changes."

They endorsed a reduction in the size of the board of directors, from more than 200 to seventy-five. Jewish communities were asked to "assume maximum responsibility" for local services for the armed forces and hospitalized veterans. Jewish community centers would play an enlarged role in this program.

The delegates re-elected Solomon Litt, a New York broker, as president of the board for a second two-year term, says the New York Times. Walter D. Heller, of San Francisco, was elected a vice president of the organization.

Six At N. Y. Federation Dinner Gave $1 Million Each

Six New Yorkers attending a fund-raising dinner of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies each gave lately at least $1 million to the Federation's $104,365,000 building drive. The Federation announced that at the same dinner, spokesmen for four foundations each pledged another $1 million and that the 115 other guests attending the affair each pledged a minimum of $50,000.

At the end of the third months of the proposed three-year drive 64 per cent — $66,850,000 — of the goal had been pledged, says the New York Times. At the dinner alone, a total of $24,375,000 was pledged. A spokesman for the Federation said it was believed that never before had so much been raised at a single event for local health and welfare. The dinner was at the Hotel Plaza.

The largest single pledge came from Mrs. Henry L. Moses, widow of a prominent New York lawyer and philanthropist. Her gifts totalled $2,050,000.

The drive, which the Federation calls its "City of Light" campaign, is to raise money for new hospital facilities in metropolitan New York and to maintain present services in the Federation's 116 agencies.

The campaign is believed to be the largest single philanthropic campaign in history.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Linsky and Mr. and Mrs. Albert List also pledged $1 million "or more" at the dinner. The other individual $1 million donors remained anonymous. Mr. Linsky is chairman of the board and president of Swingline, Inc., stapler manufacturers. Mr. List is president of Glen Alden Corp., a holding company.

The foundations making the $1 million pledges were the Henrietta and Stuart Hirschmann Foundation, the Henry Kauffman Foundation, and the Adolph and Felicia Leon Foundation. The fourth foundation making a $1 million pledge requested anonymity.

Mrs. Moses said that $1,450,000 of her gift would be used in the creation of the Henry and Lucy Moses Research Pavillion at Montefiore Hospital. She also gave $400,000 to other Montefiore building fund projects, as well as another $100,000 for undesignated building funds.

Mrs. Moses also pledged $700,000, contingent upon the raising of an equal sum, for the construction of two additional floors of the Solomon & Betty Loeb Memorial Home, a convalescent center now being built at Montefiore, says the New York Times.

Mrs. Moses said that her interest in Montefiore is a continuation of the work in behalf of the hospital done by her late husband. Mr. Moses, who died last year, was chairman of the board of the hospital from 1948 until his death. He had been president of the hospital from 1936 to 1948. "He made it what it is now — one of the top

Sculptor's Bequest To Israel Is Priceless Life Work Of 300 Clay Originals

Jacques Lipchitz, one of the world's foremost sculptors, had bequeathed 300 of the original creations in clay by the artist's own hands, which represents his entire life's work, to the Jerusalem Museum of Art, currently under construction on a forty acre hill in the Holy City. "Museums and collectors have been talking to me about these originals for years," said Mr. Lipchitz. "Nothing came of it because of many emotional problems. Then one day Billy Rose, chairman of the new Museum's Art Committee, came up with a simple solution that my wife and I accepted immediately and without reservation."

The irrevocable codicil of the will, which spells out this virtually priceless gift, was read by Mr. Rose to the guests who attended a small party at the artist's house in Hasting-on-Hudson on the eve of his seventieth birthday. The gift of the fifty year productivity of Lipchitz, who first exhibited in Paris in 1911, was hailed by Andrew Ritchie, one of America's foremost art critics, the director of the Yale University Art Gallery:

"Jacques Lipchitz's bequest of over three hundred plasters to the America-Israel Cultural Foundation which will be housed in the Jerusalem Museum, representing a lifetime's work, is an event of international significance in the world of art. A Jew, proud of his ancestry and confident of the integrity of his work as an artist, has chosen to honor the new state of Israel, the land of his ancient fathers, with the intimate products of his hand, the original plaster models from which all his bronze sculptures have been cast. Any museum would be proud of such a bequest. The Jerusalem Museum, Lipchitz's chosen place for this legacy, must be doubly proud. It may now look forward, in the distant future, I hope, to becoming the only place in the world where the full and magnificent genius of one of the greatest sculptors of our century may be studied and enjoyed."

The Lipchitz gift was accepted by Samuel Rubin, president of the America-Israel Cultural Foundation, of New York. "This is one of the outstanding art contributions of our times," said Mr. Rubin. "It will do much to make Jerusalem the cultural capital of the Middle East. Mr. Lipchitz's works will be housed in a special pavilion in the Jerusalem museum that will be for him what the Rodin Museum in Paris is for the celebrated French artist. Its doors will welcome people from Israel's neighboring countries in a spirit of good will."

Included in the Lipchitz gift are such famous works as "Mother and Child"; "La-Joie de Vivre"; Rape of Europa"; "Prayer"; "Figure"; "Sacrifice". Mr. Rose said that the Lipchitz Pavilion, budgeted at $450,000, will be completed by 1963. "The new facilities of the Jerusalem Museum of Art," he said, "will cost approximately $5,000,000, of which $2,500,000 is presently available. Israel's new national museum, will be located on a forty-acre hill in Jerusalem adjacent to the Knesset (Parliament) and the campus of the Hebrew University. The museum complex will bring together the half century old Bezalel National Art Museum, the largest general museum in the Middle East; the Samuel Bronfman Archaeology Museum, the Shrine of the Book, repository of the Dead Sea Scrolls, and the Billy Rose Art Garden, designed by Isamu Noguchi, which will be the setting for the collection of sculpture I donated last year."

Lipchitz is represented in the world's finest museums. Among them are: Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the Museum of Modern Art, New York; Barnes Foundation, Merion, Pa.; Musee d'Art Moderne, Paris; Philadelphia Museum of Art; The Detroit Institute of Arts; Tate Gallery, London; Cleveland Museum of Art; Musee des Beaux-Arts, Rouen, France; Rijksmuseum Knoller-Muller, Otterlo, The Netherlands; Art Gallery of Toronto, Canada; Jewish Museum of New York.

Among the private collectors who own bronzes and marbles by Lipchitz are: Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller, of New York; Mrs. John D. Rockefeller III, New York; Vicomte Charles de Noailles, of Hyeres, France; Joseph Hirshhorn, New York; Mr. and Mrs. John Cowles, Minneapolis; G. David Thompson, Pittsburgh; Mrs. Werner Baer, Zurich; and Billy Rose, New York. (The piece owned by Mr. Rose was included in the collection he donated to Jerusalem last year.)

Mr. Lipchitz was born in Russia on August 22, 1891. He attended schools in Binlystok and Vilna, and went to Paris in 1909. He lived and worked in Paris until June, 1941, when, following the invasion of France by the Nazis, he came to the United States. He married the former Yulla Halberstadt, in the United States. Of his own work, he has said: "You will find in my work two clearly defined ways, one built on a solid foundation; the other a kind of lyrical expansion; the one nourishing the other in a continuous flow of mutual support."

Hebrew U. Gets Noted President, And Chairman

Dr. Eliahu Elath is the new president of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, and Judge Louis E. Levinthal, of Philadelphia, is chairman of the University's board of governors. Dr. Elath, former Israel Ambassador to the United States and to Great Britain, and Judge Levinthal were unanimously elected by the board of governors. Professor Giulio Racah continues to serve as Rector of the University.

Dr. Elath received a Bachelor's degree and later a Doctorate from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Born in Russia in 1903, he arrived in Palestine as a pioneer in 1925 and worked the land for several years thereafter. From 1931 to 1934 he was a correspondent for Palestine journals and for Reuters in Syria and Lebanon. During this period he attended the American University in Beirut, having acquired an A.B. degree from the Hebrew University. His intimate knowledge of the Middle East led to his appointment in 1934 as head of the Middle and Near Eastern Division of the Jewish Agency. In 1945 he became the Jewish Agency's representative in the United States, a position he held until 1948, when Israel became an independent state and he was named Israel's first Ambassador to the U.S.

His highly successful mission to the United States was duplicated in Great Britain, to which he was appointed as Israel's Ambassador in 1950. After a decade of distinguished service in London, Dr. Elath returned to Jerusalem as political advisor to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He became head of the Afro-Asian Institute of Histadrut, a valuable experience in relation to his new role of leadership at the Hebrew University, where an ever-increasing number of students from African and Asian countries are enrolled.

Judge Levinthal, of the board of governors, is one of the outstanding leaders of American Jewry. He was president of the Zionist Organization of America from 1941 to 1943; is on the presidium of the actions committee of the World Zionist Organization; was appointed by Secretary of War Patterson to serve as special advisor on Jewish affairs to the U.S. European Military Command; has furthered Jewish education and scholarship in the U.S. for many years, and was president of the Jewish Publication Society of America; was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia; and since his resignation from the Bench, has been counsel to a Philadelphia law firm.

Refreshments were served. The organization concert at Eaton Auditorium, at 9 p.m., on May 5, will present the Viennese folk singer, Martha Schlamme, who has sung in Canada, and other countries. Tickets from the office, RU. 3-7338, or at the box office. Proceeds from this event go to the Adopt-a-Child project. # A.J.C. Opposes Religious Groups In Peace Corps Projects Overseas

The American Jewish Congress expressed "vigorous opposition" to participation by religious groups and missionary societies in Peace Corps projects overseas. In a resolution, the national executive committee of the Congress said the use of government funds by religious and missionary groups would violate the principle of separation of church and state as required by the First Amendment of the Constitution.

Moreover, the Jewish group warned, there was "grave danger" that such groups would "confuse their governmental obligations with their "missionary zeal," thereby imperiling the success of the Peace Corps program. The resolution was adopted unanimously at a special meeting of the AJCongress executive committee at Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84th Street, New York. A copy was sent to R. Sargent Shriver Jr., director of the corps.

Passage of the resolution, it was indicated, was prompted by reports that about half of all Peace Corps projects assigned to voluntary agencies would be carried out by religious groups. The statement pointed out that in its unanimous decision in the Torcaso case upholding the right of an atheist to hold public office, the U.S. Supreme Court had reiterated the principle that "neither a State nor the Federal government can, openly or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations and groups, and vice versa." The AJCongress resolution commented:

"The involvement of religious bodies in the government's Peace Corps program represents just that type of partnership between church and state that the First Amendment to the Constitution was intended to prevent."

According to the American Jewish Congress policy statement, the long tradition of missionary activities in foreign lands by church groups, and the political and secular purposes of government, including the Peace Corps program, are "independent objectives which must be pursued independently. To combine them or to merge the operations of government and church will only prove detrimental to the achievement of both objectives. Any use by religious groups of government funds or of Peace Corps personnel in their church-sponsored projects would, we believe, violate the Constitutional mandate of separation of church and state.

"Any requirement of religious belief or affiliation among Peace Corps personnel, or any veto power by religious bodies in the selection of Peace Corps volunteers, would violate the Constitutional prohibition against religious tests for public office. Any effort, whether deliberate or coincidental, on the part of church groups, either to spread their religious beliefs or enhance their good name through participation in the Peace Corps program overseas would violate the Constitutional mandate against use of governmental funds or personnel to promote religious teachings or practices."

The AJCongress statement also warned that the objectives of the Peace Corps program might be "severely handicapped" by the presence of church groups as participants. The resolution declared:

"It is not unlikely that many citizens of the countries where such Peace Corps projects are launched will view the program with suspicion as being motivated not so much by the goal of furthering the cause of peace as by promoting the missionary ends of the church groups involved. It would be unfortunate indeed, if the noble objectives which the Peace Corps is designed to serve, and its effectiveness in carrying out its vital purposes, should be handicapped by the ill-conceived notion of having religious groups carry out a governmental operation."

Dr. Joachim Prinz, of Newark, N. J., national president of the AJCongress, presided at the meeting of its policy-making body. Founded in 1918, the American Jewish Congress lists as one of its goals "the protection of civil rights and the strengthening of civil liberties, including religious freedom and church-state separation, for all Americans."

Leon Levin, 636 Belmont Avenue, Montreal, left, vice-president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, will be the guest of honour at the Negev Dinner of the Jewish National Fund, on May 16, at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel. His name will be commemorated in Israel through the establishment of a Nachla in the Western Negev. Mr. and Mrs. Levin have a son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. Hyman Surchin (Meta), 545 Grosvenor Avenue; and four grandchildren: Anne, Elinor, Betsy, and Mark. Sir Barnett Janner, M.P., of London, England, will be the guest speaker. He is president of the Zionist Federation of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the Board of Deputies of British Jews. Dr. Harry C. Bolton will be chairman of the dinner.

Ontario Human Rights Code

The Hon. John P. Robarts, Premier of Ontario, who spoke recently in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario during the second reading of the Bill consolidating several measures into a single Ontario Human Rights Code, emphasized:

"I am quite certain that none of us has any doubts that this measure, as well as its predecessors, reflects the conscience of the people of Ontario, nor do I have any doubts that the vast majority of our people are now putting its principles into practice. That is not to deny, of course, that there are still pockets of prejudice to be found in Ontario which must always demand our vigilance and concern. . . . We recognize that law alone will not suffice. If it could, we should indeed be living in a sinless world, for goodness knows we have enough laws, perhaps too many of them. The purpose of this Bill is to combine the sanction clauses of the existing legislation with our extensive program of education and enlightenment, and thereby to make law the ally of sense and decency. . . . The codification of the several Acts will, in itself, promote understanding and acceptance of the principles of human rights. Under this bill, the Human Rights Commission will be given responsibility for receiving and investigating complaints and for enforcing the anti-discrimination provisions of the Act, as well as for planning and conducting education activities. The main principle of the bill is that it will place education and legal sanctions together in one administrative set-up thereby co-ordinating the human rights efforts of the government and facilitating the whole program".

Cardinal Leger: "We Must Apply Oursēlves To The Removal Of Prejudice"

His Eminence Cardinal Leger, Archbishop of Montreal, in a recent address to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, which has been described as one of the most hard-hitting speeches he has ever delivered, stressed that "certain tasks require a common and concerted action. We must apply ourselves to the removal of prejudice or ignorance which separate social classes, ethnic groups and even men of different religions". The Cardinal also spoke of immigration, emphasizing that "Canada, with a 'rational' immigration policy, could welcome hundreds of thousands of immigrants without affecting its standard of living. Immigration, when it is properly planned, can only be a source of enrichment, both material and cultural, for our nation and we should do everything to make the immigrants feel at home. Immigration, when orderly, can never be a source of unemployment. It would be a tragedy and a scandal if we could live at peace with ourselves without doing more than the very little we do now for others in the midst of our abundance".
